Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Gr 9 Up—In this genre-bending story, Jaffe offers a world in which the thoughts and decisions of individuals are observed and monitored by an organization known as the Dynamic Corporeal Suspension System. Sadie Ames, a rich girl from the suburbs, has been accepted into the Mind Corps Fellowship program, where she trains as an Observer. Her job is to enter the mind of Ford Winters, urban bad boy, and monitor his life from the inside out. Sadie unexpectedly finds herself deeply drawn to Ford, and when he makes a terrible decision, Sadie must choose between her duty as an Observer and her growing attachment to a boy she's never met in the flesh. The enticing characters and high-tech suspense will appeal to readers who enjoy science fiction, mystery, and romance.—Katie Wilkinson, Gar-Field High School, Woodbridge, VA

From Booklist

Technology has created a way for wealthy teens to ride along in the minds of unsuspecting destitute teens in a futuristic Detroit. After winning a highly coveted spot in the prestigious Mind Corps Fellowship program, Sadie is assigned to the mind of Ford Winters, where she will be able to see through his eyes and experience his thoughts and emotions. As the plot slowly unfurls, Sadie finds herself becoming less of a dispassionate observer and more intertwined with Ford, which throws her rigid control and training into confusion as she starts to experience a connection with him never experienced by Minders. But Ford has committed a crime, and Sadie faces the unenviable position of deciding whether or not to turn in the boy she has never met—yet has fallen in love with. Although the story line lacks immediacy, it should attract readers of clever futuristic fiction for its sheer originality alone. Grades 7-12. --Julie Trevelyan
