Grody's Not So Golden Rules By Nicole Rubel

Why do kids have to follow so many rules? Everyone in Grody's life gets to tell him what to do: his mother, his father, his sister, his teacher. . . . He's tired of it! Determined to take matters into his own hands, Grody comes up with his own set of rules. Clean socks? Who needs 'em? Use a napkin? What's the point? Beloved author-illustrator Nicole Rubel has created a character who will have kids howling--and maybe, just maybe, seeing the reason behind some of those awful rules grown-ups like so much.

Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Kindergarten-Grade 3-To counter the rules of his parents, sister, teacher, and even the crossing guard, Grody makes up a few of his own, such as "Rule Number One": "Don't get up in the morning. You're just going to have to go to bed again at night!" Best known as the illustrator of Jack Gantos's "Rotten Ralph" series (Houghton), Rubel brings the same kid-friendly sensibilities to the artwork here, incorporating markers, colored pencils, watercolor, fabric, fabric paint, and photographs. An inset on each spread shows the authority figure and rule that the pup is protesting, and the pictures are replete with humorous hyperbole. The point won't be lost on kids when, for example, Grody goes flying through the air because of "Rule Number Nine": "Always run down the stairs instead of walking. It saves time"; or employs his own dish-washing technique in "Rule Number Twelve": "Don't wash dirty dishes when you can lick them clean!" The final spread shows the effects of following the dog's rules, from "very dirty ears" to "unpleasant body odor." A true child-pleaser.

K-Gr. 2. Grody, the slovenly antihero of Rubel's latest effort, more than lives up to his name. By blissfully ignoring the usual regulations (delivered on each page by significant relatives and adults) to follow his own set of anti-rules (writ like commandments on each spread), Grody becomes such a revolting slob that no one would ever want to be like him. Thus, Grody succeeds as both a humorous example of how not to behave and as a satire of the determinedly cheery world of Richard Scarry et al. Rubel's subversive collage-ink-and-wash illustrations offer a twisted, psychedelic view of suburbia that will draw peals of laughter for its sheer grossness ("Rule number twelve: Don't wash dishes when you can lick them clean"). But for all his outrageousness, Grody is not nearly as likable as the cat Rotten Ralph, and the story lacks the tension that would have given it more humor and bite. Instead, Grody is just, well, grody. Children may secretly admire his dedication to grossness even as they determine not to be like him, but at the same time, they may wonder about the conflict between his bad behavior and the rule-bound drudgery suggested by Rubel's adult world.
